

Introduction

Dr. Bothra practices hospital medicine and is affiliated with Kettering Health Network in Dayton, OH. He graduated medical school from S P Medical College in Bikaner, India, and did his residency at West Penn Allegheny Health System in Pittsburgh. He earned his MBA from Indiana University's Kelley School of Business. He worked at the University of Pittsburgh for many years before moving to his current position in Dayton. He has served as the hospital's Medical Director of Cerner at UPMC and Co-Medical Director of an LTAC. He holds an appointment as a Clinical Assistant Professor of Medicine at WSU Boonshoft School of Medicine. He is a fellow of both the American College of Physicians and the American Board of Quality Assurance and Utilization Review Physicians.

He is the chair of utilization management for three hospitals of KHN and the vice president and board member of his multispecialty group of about 85 providers. He also serves on the alumni board for the Kelley School of Business and the Capstone review board for ACP's Certificate in Physician Leadership. He also has a strong business background: he helped run his family's furniture business and found his own software training company during high school. He has been part of a novel cryptocurrency venture aiming to create the first stable coin with SEC approval. He is the incoming vice president of the Montgomery County Medical Society. He also serves as the Treasurer for the Miami Valley Association of Physicians of Indian Origin. In the past, he has served as a delegate to the OSMA resolutions committee and feels honored to be nominated as the alternate delegate to the AMA.
